Jonathan Hain is an attorney with Woods Aitken and a member of the firm's transactional group. His practice areas include real estate, business services, financial institutions, and estate planning. He represents business owners, individuals, nonprofits, and political subdivisions on a range of transactional matters, including drafting and reviewing agreements, entity formation and governance, and compliance review.

Jonathan also works with clients on the formation and administration of trusts and estates and advises business owners on succession planning.

Jonathan pairs professional legal guidance with neighborly client service. He listens first, learns his clients' goals, and brings a dedicated, diligent approach to everything from everyday agreements to complex matters. Jonathan helps individuals and business owners look ahead, understand the legal and market risks they face, and plan accordingly for each stage of life and business.

Before pursuing a law degree, Jonathan spent a decade in the electric utility industry, an experience that gives him a practical foundation for addressing his clients' needs.

Jonathan earned his J.D. from the University of Nebraska College of Law, where he received CALI Excellence for the Future Awards in Real Estate Transactions and Equality Before the Law. Jonathan served as a law clerk with Woods Aitken for two years before joining the firm as an attorney.
